

This winter, as usual, both municipal plows and local homeowners will be out trying to clear away snow as quickly as possible after the storm ends. Just as certain as the storms that will come, is the fact that some homeowners will be displeased because we have plowed their already-cleared driveways full of snow again. We wish we could leave each driveway meticulously clear, but doing this would mean we could never finish plowing the public roads in a reasonable time. With your cooperation this inconvenience can be minimized. The sketch above shows how you can clear your driveway to reduce the possibility that after the plow passes you will be snow-bound again. If you shovel snow in the direction of traffic and also make a pocket next to your driveway, as shown, snow accumulations on the plow will dump into that pocket and much less will go into the driveway opening. We invite your cooperation and assure you of our desire to cause you a minimum of inconvenience.
